

Richard Spanney listed his recreations in 1937 as 'art, swimming, motoring, and reading' – captured in a Percy Cannot sketch including Spanney's St John's Lutheran Church of 1934-36.

(Men of Western Australia, 1937, pl. 95).

Rudolph Richard Spanney (Spangenberg) (1884-1948) was born 27 July 1884 at Hansborough, near Kapunda in South Australia. Richard was the first child of German-born teacher Hermann Wilhelm Spangenberg, and Olga Martha Spangenberg. He had six siblings - Clara Otilie (1886-1965), Alma Alvira Caecilia (1888-1944), Hermann Arthur (1891-1896), Arthur Oskar [Oswald] (1893-1966), Alfred Otto (1896-1958), and Hertha Isolde (1899-1989). Richard initially served an apprenticeship as a carpenter, joiner and cabinet-maker at Tanunda. The Spangenberg family departed South Australia for Western Australia in 1906, crossing the Great Australian Bight by steamer, and in 1907 Hermann Spangenberg is listed as a dairy farmer at Gosnells.

Biographical notes that Richard provided in 1937 suggest that he won a scholarship to the Perth Technical School. Newspaper records do confirm that he won a carpentry scholarship in 1908, allowing a year of free fees at the next tuition level. In 1910, he was articled to Oldham & Cox, Architects. Richard stated that from 1913 to 1922, "he continued his architectural studies in the United States of America, at the San Francisco Architectural Club, the California School of Arts and Crafts, the Boston Architectural Club, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and the University of Pennsylvania, where he was Gold Medallist, 1920-1921 Senior Class. He was also awarded second place in the New York State Public Library Competition. Having gained experience in the USA, and having travelled widely in England and Europe, in 1923 he returned to Western Australia, where he set up his own professional practice as an architect.” Richard’s return to WA may have been prompted by concerns for the health of his parents – as his father died in January 1923, and his mother passed away in June 1923, both at 50 Queens Crescent Mount Lawley. Another event that may have prompted a return was the fact that his younger brother Alfred was married at St George’s Cathedral in January 1923.

Richard appears to have changed his name from Spangenberg to Spanney soon after arrival back in WA, as letters from him in late March 1923 were signed Spangenberg, and those written in late April 1923 were signed Spanney. The change was almost certainly prompted by continuing antagonism shown to people with German names by some sections of the Western Australian community in the post First World War period. Cemetery records suggest that of Richard’s sisters, Clara (Clare) changed her surname to Spanney, Alma (Cecilia) used Spanney as an alias, whilst Hertha (Hatty) resolutely retained Spangenberg, despite a Second World War prisoner of war camp in Germany having the same name.

It newspaper advertisements of 1923 calling tenders for his designs, Richard was careful to call himself a designer, not an architect, as he had not yet obtained registration as an architect in WA – required by the relatively new Architects Act of 1921. Spanney presented his qualifications to the Architects Board of Western Australia for consideration, and he was duly registered (no.83) as an architect in Western Australia on 25 February 1924, the same day as his brother Oswald Spanney of Wyndham was registered (no.82). It had been noted at a March 1917 meeting of the West Australian Institute of Architects that O. Spangenberg, a student member of the WAIA, was serving in the First World War. From this note we can deduce that Oswald had followed in his somewhat older brother’s footsteps, training under an articulated arrangement in Perth to become an architect.

From 1925 to 1927, Spanney's office was in the Lafayette Buildings, at 79 Barrack Street in Perth. From 1928 to 1932 he was working at the Moana Chambers, 614 Hay Street Perth. Wises Directories also list O. Spanney as an architect at Perth 1928-1930, and it is possible that 'Ossie' was working with Richard in this busier period prior to the onset of the Great Depression.

In the later 1920s, Richard Spanney was responsible for the design of many suburban residences, particularly in Mount Lawley and Nedlands. Projects of note included the Westminster private hospital at Adelaide Terrace in Perth, well-known businessman Cecil Breckler's residence at 63 Clotilde Street Mount Lawley of 1927-28, the East Perth Picture Theatre for the East Perth Progress Association in 1928, and a shop (Hoile's Pharmacy) / residence at the corner of Meriwa Street and Stirling Highway in Nedlands in 1929. The insightful Spanney provided a number of insightful commentaries in the press, including a suggestion for an underground tramway in the City of Perth, and for residential street treatments based on his experiences in the USA.

It is likely that Spanney was a member of the Lutheran Church congregation of Perth. In the late 1920s Spanney drew plans for the Rev. R. M. Graebner for a proposed Lutheran Church at Perth in the Inter-War Free Classical style. However, these were not implemented. In 1928-29, Spanney designed additions and a garage for Rev. Graebner's residence at Clotilde Street in Mount Lawley. In 1934, Spanney again drew plans for a new Lutheran Church and an adjoining assembly hall, to be located on a site in Aberdeen Street, near the junction with Museum Street. The church design was for an Inter-War Gothic style church. The nave was designed without side aisles, and intended to accommodate 200 worshippers. Features of the church were a chancel, sanctuary, organ chamber, font alcove, sacristy and 'an attractively detailed bell tower, with the main entrance at its base'.

Opened in 1936, St John's Lutheran Church at Perth features the innovative use of Darlington stone for the walls, and this appearance was so well regarded that Spanney soon secured another commission utilising the same material, for The New Church of 1939 at 176 Adelaide Terrace in Perth. Both of these churches are now on the State Register of Heritage Places in WA.

From 1936 to 1941 Spanney's office was in the recently built Airways House, at 88 St George's Terrace in Perth, and in 1940 he was listed as a member of the Royal Institute of Architects of Western Australia. Although his father was naturalised in 1900, and Richard was Australian-born - apparently maintaining an American accent following his time in the USA, with the onset of the Second World War (1939-1945) he may have again faced scrutiny due to mistrust of those with German origins. Spanney's experience of discrimination parallels that of Gus Creightmore [Kreitmayer] (1910-1949), another Australian-born architect of German descent who practiced in WA during the Inter War period.

Richard Spanney's home at 703 Beaufort Street Mount Lawley was demolished c.1980 for the expansion of Perth College (Molyneux p.52). The nearby 34 Lawley Crescent (cnr Beaufort Street) Mount Lawley is attributed to Spanney by Ian Molyneux (Google 2019).

Spanney lived at 703 Beaufort Street in Mount Lawley from at least 1925, which was likely to be of his own design. Brothers Ossie and Alf both married and had two children each, whereas Richard and his three sisters did not marry. Cecelia died in January 1944, and it appears she had been living at the same house as Richard. Clare had been the principal of Spanneys Pianos, but the 1920s-1930s business was eventually wound up and both she and Hatty may also have resided at the large Beaufort Street residence over time.

Spanney is not listed as an architect in Wises Directories after 1941. A death notice reveals that 'Dick' Spanney was working at the Department of Works and Housing in 1948. It is likely that with Second World War austerity, he had taken on a government position in order to maintain an income, prior to retirement. Family memories recall that Dick suffered from diabetes, and as a pedestrian had been hit by a motor vehicle in his later years. Spanney died 15 April 1948 aged 63 years, and after a private service by Rev. Graebner, was buried in the Lutheran section at Karrakatta Cemetery.
